

Meet Hannah

We supported Hannah throughout her business management degree in Kenya. She graduated in 2014 and is now a mum and a successful business woman.

Hannah is one of 5 siblings. Her family were just about able to scrape enough money together to get her through secondary school but sending her to university was just not possible for them.

We were pleased to accept Hannah onto our scholarship programme and support her her degree. She was so happy to graduate in 2014—something she never thought would be possible when she finished school.

Fast forward to now and Hannah has a daughter who is now in school and is a successful business woman with 2 businesses: one selling shoes in a shop and online and the other providing goods for government contracts. Hannah donates some of the school shoes she would otherwise have sold to a local orphanage so the children have shoes to wear to school and also pays the school fees of some of the children in her home village.

Hannah has managed to buy a tuk-tuk and create an online platform to grow her business, and has also bought a plot of land on which she is intending to build her own house.

Hannah is the epitome of why we do what we do – a true example of how the gift of education can make such a transformative difference to young lives, and to their families, local communities and wider societies.

To support Hannah cost Rafiki Thabo £750 per year
